The U.S. & European stock markets began the week with losses as investors continued to concern themselves with the tone of the Speech given by Fed Chair Powell during the Jackson Hole Conference.

Large swaths of investors expected the Fed to pivot from increasing rates to subsidizing or lowering them as inflation began to recede.

As we have pointed out frequently, the Fed fell way behind on inflation and has long stated that its focus has been and continues to be taking inflation down to its 2% target rate. The Fed's preferred inflation benchmark, the PCE Index, fell to 6.28%, a sharp decrease from the previous month, positioning it 214% above the 2% target.

Also benefiting the economy is that a recent survey showed that companies' indicators say supply constraints are easing and pent-up demand is falling, allowing prices to alleviate.

The Purchasing Managers' Index (PMI) surveys also report better delivery times and improved prices.

As demand falls and inventories increase relative to sales, it will help ease inflation on most consumer goods in a material way.

In the last two sessions, the markets have taken a huge beating let's review:
