The U.S. & European stock markets closed with losses registering one of the worst weeks since early June.

Several issues have been at play this week, beginning with a higher-than-expected CPI reading of 8.26%, followed today by the Eurozone CPI of 9.14% and higher than the previous month. Then came the bombshell Federal Express (FDX) announcement that the First quarter results were significantly impacted by a decrease in global volume that worsened at the end of the quarter. FedEx Express mentioned that macroeconomic weakness in Asia and service challenges in Europe produced a sales loss of $800 million relative to company forecasts. FedEx stock had been trading at $204.66 and closed today at $161.07, down $43.59 or 21.29%.

These developments pushed an already pessimistic market down further as most traders reacted quite negatively to the implications of a global economic meltdown.
