The US and European stock markets fell further today as Federal Reserve Banks third 75 basis points increase and Fed Chair Powell inflation fighting measures without taking the US into a recession. However today the Fed Chair made his most dire and hawkish pronouncement stating "We have got to get inflation behind us. I wish there were a painless way to do that", he said at the press conference following the Fed's decision to further extend its recent string of supersized rate rises. "There isn't".

The mere mention that the Fed would continue increasing rates even if it produces a recession in the US is forcing most investors away from riskier assets classes and taking flight to safety.

Sugar coating bad news created uncertainty and increased volatility, perhaps with this most recent pronouncement investors will focus on the bigger picture and prepare for a long and hard inflation fight with rising interest rates.
